The New York Times Press Facility at College Point Wins Three More Awards

The New York Times press facility, designed by Dario Designs, has received three new awards including Best Industrial Interiors, Best New Construction–Landscaping, and Best New Construction–Industrial by the Queens (NY) Chamber of Commerce.

Dario Designs was involved in this project from its conception to completion. This is one of 16 “Consolidation – Partnering - Outsourcing” projects currently under way at Dario Designs.

The record-breaking, multi-million dollar monthly savings has helped set a new consolidation trend on fire. “Consolidation of printing, packaging, and distribution, as well as cooperation in news and advertising, are on the table for hundreds of newspapers throughout North America,” said David Ehrhardt, Vice President at Dario Designs. Virtually unheard of 10 years ago, with the exception of a few national newspapers, today’s newspapers are willing, and in many cases eager, to work together and even consider third party companies for printing, packaging, and distribution. Dario Designs has created software and a new metrics for evaluating and quantifying the operational statistics needed to make informed consolidation decisions.
