Seacoast begins plant

Seacoast Media Group last week broke ground on a new 70,000-square-foot, $17 million production facility in Portsmouth, N.H.

The group, which publishes the Portsmouth Herald, is consolidating editorial, administrative and production operations now taking place at two separate buildings on the site. The building is expected to be completed in early 1007, according to an article published on the Herald's website.

"What we do now is complicated," said John tabor, publisher of Seacoast Media Group. "We look forward to having all our operations under one roof," Dario Designs Inc. is designing the new facility.
